Conference overview

By Liz Groom, chair of Cambridgeshire Police Federation

As the dust settles on another annual conference, I wanted to share my highs and lows from Manchester as we get back to work.

After a four-year break from a live conference, it was really nice to be together again at an in-person event.

I thought the content in the main was really good and holding it over two days is definitely better than three as things didn't seem as stretched out.

The definite highlight for me was the presentation from Kriss Akabusi. What a way to start conference!

He was so positive and lively. His journey wasn't an easy one but it reinforced to me how the influence and encouragement of others can make a huge difference.

Actually meeting him in the break was such a joy. He is far taller than I expected and his laugh is even more infectious in person too!

Another highlight was the break-out session on police driving which I really enjoyed. It has been years in the making and finally, after persistence, it is coming into play.

Unfortunately, I can't be as positive about the Home Secretary's speech which, to be honest, was a real low point.

Priti Patel turned up at the conference already looking annoyed and in my view she just didn't want to be there.

She gave us nothing and I thought her words were hollow. She didn't convince me that she would support a meaningful pay rise even if we did go back to the negotiating table and re-engage with the Police Remuneration Review Body.

For me, even just increasing the pay for new joiners, which would encourage those with life experience to join as well as younger people, would be a start and allow officers to have a life but she gave no indication of that happening in the near future.

She couldn't answer the question when someone asked if she could live on a student officer wage!

Priti Patel's speech followed Steve Hartshorn's first keynote address to the annual conference. It was okay for a first speech but I would have liked it to have been a bit more passionate, a bit more from the heart.

I think that was perhaps more down to nerves and presentation than the content and I do get the feeling our new national chair wants to try to form a new relationship with Ms Patel which is a good thing as not getting on with the Home Secretary hasn't got us anywhere in the past. We will have to wait to see.

I think all the main issues that we are facing as a Police Federation were covered although I think perhaps a break-out session around the new conduct regulations (2020) and reflective practice would have been useful to get an idea of how it is being used around the country.

So, in summary, it was a good conference with some interesting discussions but the main message coming from Manchester is that pay is still very much at the forefront of Police Federation focus and will continue to be so, as will the pension remedy.

And always remember, your Police Federation is there for you, so please do not hesitate to contact us with any issues and concerns you may have.

CHAIR URGES HOME SECRETARY TO ADDRESS PAY CRISIS

Newly elected national Federation chair Steve Hartshorn.

Steve Hartshorn makes first keynote address to the Police Federation's national conference

Police Federation chair Steve Hartshorn urged the Home Secretary to address the pay crisis facing police officers as the cost of living continues to soar.

Steve, the newly elected national Federation chair, used his keynote speech at the annual conference to highlight the key issues facing officers.

Speaking to the conference in Manchester, which included Priti Patel, and to the audience online, Steve said that after years of real term pay cuts, officers were struggling to make ends meet and even having to use food banks to feed their families.

Steve said: "Over the last decade, we have seen a real term pay cut of around 20 per cent. Other costs haven't stood still – gas, electric and fuel costs all continue to rise, and National Insurance contributions increased.

"Yet the very people who put their lives on the line during the pandemic, alongside other key workers, were told they deserve nothing extra to help with these costs.

"They are told they are brave; they are told they do a unique job. They were thanked for putting themselves and their families in danger as Covid gripped the country, and yet that acknowledgement – amounted to nothing.

"It's frustrating to see and hear from colleagues who are struggling to feed their families and going to food banks.

"It angers me to hear good and experienced people talking about leaving the job – not because they want to, but because they can't afford not to.

"This cannot go on. It's time for change."

He called for a fully independent body to assess police pay and make recommendations which "are binding on Government and implemented in full".

He said the Police Remuneration Review Body (PRRB) wasn't truly independent and the decision by the Federation last year to walk away wasn't "taken lightly".

"We're not asking for special treatment," he said, "We're asking that you remember and recognise our special responsibilities and unique status with the restrictions on our private lives and the lives of our families.

"Government cannot continue to treat the police as the poor relation of the public sector."

Pay was one of four key areas Steve focused on during his speech, with pensions, presence and pride also highlighted.

"Pay – we need fair pay and fair terms and conditions of service for all police officers," he said.

"Pensions – it's not unreasonable to have long-term clarity over pensions so that people can plan for their futures with certainty.

"Presence – Government, police leaders and the media must listen to us and hear what we say, because we are the undisputed voice of policing.

"And pride – I want police officers to be able to have pride in what they do and be treated with the respect they deserve."

Steve urged the Home Secretary to look at the issue of firearms and greater protection for colleagues "as a matter of priority".

He said: "There's no legal entitlement for officers to possess Pava or Taser under the Firearms Act, off duty, on call or in between shifts when they may be required to complete work at one place and re-parade at another, without returning to a police station.

"Our resolution is for a change of legislation under the Firearms Act to specify what can be permitted to be carried off duty, on call, and under what circumstances."

He also highlighted the frustration felt by detectives at the changes to Crown Prosecution Guidance on charging.

"We understand the need for disclosure, yet the need for full trial-ready files is often unnecessary, especially if there is already a guilty plea," he said.

Steve turned his attention to protracted misconduct investigations and the negative impact they have on officers and their families.

Currently, there's no time limit on an investigation before proceedings are taken, he said, adding: "We regularly see cases taking years to conclude. The impact this has on officers and their colleagues cannot be underestimated."

"Our solution is that 12-month explanations should be mandated in all cases that have not been finalised at that point. LQCs (legally qualified chairs) should be able to scrutinise these explanations and provide direction.

"We accept there may sometimes be circumstances when this might not be possible, but these should be few and far between. And there must be some redress when investigating authorities do not comply with the rules and regulations, they themselves are charged with upholding."

He added: "My colleagues are often the focus of vexatious complaints, and this would go some way to protecting the protectors."

Concluding his first speech to conference as chair, Steve urged the Home Secretary to carry out change for the good of members.

"I make no apology for this being such a long list of asks," he said. "Some come at a cost, but others are free, and while they cannot happen overnight next week is a great time to start.

"And this is all I ask of you today, Home Secretary, so on behalf of my colleagues across England and Wales, it's time for change."

OUR REP SAYS...

I thought Steve was quite nervy but this was very understandable as the new chair making his first conference keynote speech. I thought he really grew into it as the conference went on and his speech was excellent challenging the Home Secretary. I believe he will be a great leader for us.

HOME SECRETARY SAYS SHE IS PROUDLY PRO-POLICE

Priti Patel giving her keynote speech to conference.

Priti Patel highlights provisions of Police, Crime, Sentencing and Courts Act

The Home Secretary says she's proud to see Harper's Law coming into force following a campaign backed by the Police Federation of England and Wales.

Priti Patel praised Lissie Harper for her campaign for mandatory life sentences to be given to the killers of emergency services workers following the death of her husband, PC Andrew Harper.

And she acknowledged the "full-throated support" of the Federation for the change in the law, which will come into force next month.

Speaking to the annual conference of the Police Federation of England and Wales (PFEW), Ms Patel said: "I am especially proud that Harper's Law will come into force from the end of June.

"Harper's Law means mandatory life sentences for people who kill an emergency worker while committing a crime.

"There will also be an increase in the maximum penalty for assaults on police officers and other emergency workers - from 12 months to two years in prison for common assault or battery."

Ms Patel said Harper's Law was one of a number of measures in the new Police, Crime, Sentencing and Courts Act requested by the Federation. It also includes a new test to assess the standard of officer driving.

"Should an officer be involved in a collision, the courts will now be able to judge their standard of driving against a competent and careful peer with the same prescribed training, rather than with a member of the public," she said.

"I want our highly trained officers to have the confidence they need to fight crime effectively."

Ms Patel said that the new act would "better balance the right to protest with the rights of everyone else".

She said: "As ever, you have not hesitated to put yourselves in harm's way, while a selfish minority of protestors have used guerrilla tactics such as blocking motorways and locking on to oil tankers. I know whose side I'm on."

Ms Patel told delegates in Manchester that she was "proudly pro-police".

"Anyone who feels differently should certainly vote for someone else," she said, adding: "The leaders I admire stood up for law and order. Human rights are not just for criminals, but the law-abiding majority. And that means standing squarely with you - the police."

She told the conference she was relaxing the five conditions on the use of stop and search powers under Section 60 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act in areas they anticipate serious violence.

Ms Patel wrote to police forces at the start of the week outlining her proposal, saying: "I stand wholeheartedly behind the police so that they can build on their work to drive down knife crime by making it easier for officers to use these powers to seize more weapons, arrest more suspects and save more lives."

And she confirmed the plans at conference.

"I listened carefully, and you were very clear: stop and search is a vital tool in getting knives off our streets and saving lives," she said.

She also announced that Special Constables could be given powers to carry and use Taser.

She added: "Your voices called for these changes, and having waited too long for a Home Secretary to be on your side and listen to your calls for change, I listened and have acted."

On the issue of pay and pensions, Ms Patel said that following the reform to the police pension scheme following the recommendations of the Independent Public Service Pensions Commission, it "remains one of the most valuable available in the UK".

"It is one of the most valuable available in the UK and doesn't just provide a pension, it is also financial cover for families during a police officer's service," she said.

“ I WANT OUR HIGHLY TRAINED OFFICERS TO HAVE THE CONFIDENCE THEY NEED TO FIGHT CRIME EFFECTIVELY. ”

Ms Patel urged the Federation to engage with the Police Remuneration Review Body (PRRB).

The Federation withdrew from the pay review body last year, describing it as "not fit for purpose".

She said: "It is imperative that Steve (Hartshorn, the Federation chair) and I work together on pay and pensions. I promise you that I will continue to champion your cause in Whitehall."

Ms Patel said that the Government's Uplift Programme to recruit an additional 20,000 police officers was "well on track".

"At the end of the second year of the Police Uplift Programme, we have recruited more than 13,500 additional officers," she said. "Thank you for the example you have set, which has helped make this an attractive career path."

She added that the programme was a once-in-a-generation opportunity to increase police diversity improve workforce data, engagement, and the sharing of best practice.

OUR REP SAYS...

I was disappointed that she didn't give any assurances around pay, pensions and conditions. I think policing is facing a pin-point time where we are losing officers at a much higher rate than ever before. I thought that Steve put in the right challenges to her and her offer to get back around the table did not give me any confidence that things will change with the PRRB.

STRUGGLING MUM CONFRONTS HOME SECRETARY

North Wales detective reveals realities of police pay crisis

A struggling single mum who has resorted to visiting food banks, asking her pensioner parents for money and now fears she will lose her home due to financial difficulties, stood up and challenged the Home Secretary at this year's annual conference.

DC Vicky Knight, who is a North Wales Police Federation representative, challenged Priti Patel during the keynote session at the two-day event, asking her "Could you live on £1,200 a month? How about £1,400?"

Vicky, who has been in the Force for 23 years, described how she has to borrow money from her 69-year-old mother to help pay for petrol, with her comments sparked by Ms Patel's insistence that she is committed to improving pay and conditions for police officers.

"I work with the most vulnerable members of our community and I love my job, but if the rates of interest go up, and I can't pay for my mortgage and I can't pay for my fuel, I am not going to be able to continue to go to work," Vicky said, in front of a packed auditorium.

"I went to see an accountant, and the advice was: leave the police, work for 22 hours a week, and claim benefits, and you will be better off.

"I tell this story not because I'm here for sympathy, I just want to be heard. I stand here to represent myself and many people in the Force that are like me.

"We are desperately struggling to do the job that we love and to make ends meet at home. So, I need you to be on our team and to help us, to represent us, to get us fair pay."

Responding to Vicky, Ms Patel said: "I think it just really illustrates so strongly and powerfully why we need to actually find solutions to pay issues and actually give you the support that you rightly deserve. We have to move this forward. You have that commitment from me, you absolutely do."

Speaking after the session, Vicky, who works in the child protection and vulnerable adults department, said: "I was reaching out to the Home Secretary, professional woman to professional woman. But she looked dumbfounded, I don't think she knew what to say.

"I've never struggled this much. The cost of living just seems to be going up, as the wages go down.

"It's embarrassing. I'm a professional woman and I'm begging my mum to let me have some of her pension pot, just to make ends meet."

If mortgage rates increase as anticipated, Vicky says she will have no other option than to sell her home.

"When it comes close to pay day, I literally haven't got any money. I have to think about everything, including how much petrol I have and where that will allow me to go.

“ I’VE NEVER STRUGGLED THIS MUCH. THE COST OF LIVING JUST SEEMS TO BE GOING UP, AS THE WAGES GO DOWN. ”

"How embarrassing, I'm 46-years-old and I might have to ask my parents if I can move back in with them."

She has a growing 13-year-old son, who regularly requires new school clothes and sport kits.

"My son needs feeding, he needs clothes on his back – and it's not cheap, he's a growing lad," she explained.

"I'm at that point where I literally search for change around the house, so I can pay for petrol. And, by the end of the month, me and my son have to eat whatever we have in the cupboard – literally beans and rice.

"I've been shopping in the supermarket before and one of my friends has actually paid for my shopping because he overheard me telling my son we couldn't afford certain items.

"This is real. This is a real example of what's happening. The system is totally broken, something has gone majorly wrong."

Despite struggling to make ends meet, Vicky says her passion remains for the job, which is why she continues to work in the police.

"I love what I do and that's the sad part. It's the people I help on a daily basis, they're the ones that keep me going," she added.

"Honestly though, I have looked at job vacancies online and seriously considered going for one of them. I have sleepless nights, worrying about how me and my son will eat. It's a highly emotional time."

Vicky's comments come after it was revealed police officer pay had suffered a 20 per cent real term pay cut in the last decade.

"What can be done going forward? The pay needs to be linked to inflation. Even if we're not better off, we won't be worse off – like we are now," she said.

"At the minute, I feel like we're on the Titanic, you know that bit at the end, when it's sinking and it's just about turned – I feel like the scales have tipped and we're now on a sinking ship."

KRISS AKABUSI PRAISES POLICE DURING INSPIRING OPENING SESSION

Kriss Akabusi delivering his highly animated, entertaining and inspirational session.

Athletics champion gets conference off to a lively start with uplifting story of his life

Former world athletics champion Kriss Akabusi MBE has thanked officers for the “selfless work” they do as he helped open this year’s Police Federation of England and Wales annual national conference.

The British athlete referred to the police as the “glue that holds this community together”, as he addressed the auditorium for the first session of the two-day event in Manchester.

The Olympian and five times gold medallist enticed the audience with a series of inspirational anecdotes from his life.

He told of the time fellow athlete Derek Redmond, who was hit by heartbreak when his hamstring tore while running the 400m race during the 1992 Olympics. Determined not to give up, Derek was supported over the finish line by his father, Jim.

“Think how many times you get people across the finish line,” Kriss said to those attending, “When I think about British policing, I think about how many times do you get people across that finish line.

“Whether it’s road traffic collisions, reports of domestic violence, murders, robberies and rapes, you are there, getting people over that finish line.”

He continued to say that while every now and again, we open the newspapers and it is full of negative news, imagine if we could be talking about how the police get people across the finish line.

“You the British police, I believe you’re the very best at what you do,” he added.

“But we need to remember, the past is always for reference, not for residence.”

Kriss also spoke of the people who had influenced him over his lifetime, stemming back to when he was in the Army and his talent of running was discovered.

“All of a sudden, I was recognised for doing something right,” explained Kriss, who revealed he had a challenging childhood, which resulted in him getting into mischief at school and coming away with no qualifications.

“I wonder how many times you get recognition for doing something right?” he asked the audience.

“SO MANY TIMES, WHEN I SEE A POLICE OFFICER I WANT TO SAY TO THEM ‘GOOD JOB’. IT MUST BE SO TOUGH WHEN YOU WORK SO HARD EVERY DAY BUT THE ONLY TIME THE POLICE GET MENTIONED IS WHEN THEY DO SOMETHING WRONG.”

“So many times, when I see a police officer I want to say to them ‘good job’. It must be so tough when you work so hard every day but the only time the police get mentioned is when they do something wrong.”

Kriss reflected on his time as an athlete, mentioning some of the key milestones from his career, which included him re-living the Tokyo World Championships, when the 4 x 400m relay team famously clinched the gold medal after taking a huge risk by shaking up their traditional tactics.

The auditorium came to life as members of the audience enthusiastically watched footage of Kriss, who was the last of the four-man team running the relay, winning gold as he crossed the finish line back in 1991.

“Thank you for your applause, thank you for your laughter,” he said, “Thank you for the selfless work you do.”

He ended by reciting the poem ‘Dream Big’, before concluding his motivational presentation with: “Success is the life you lead, the lessons you learn and the legacy you leave.

“With determination, hard work and the right tools you can do great things.”

OUR REP SAYS...

Conference opened with a bang with a motivational input from Kriss Akabusi - the younger ones among you will have to Google him. Needless to say that from someone of my era who knows of this legend, this was a very positive way to begin. Mick Smith

OFFICERS TURNING TO FOOD BANKS

Conference told that some members have been left in dire straits in cost of living crisis

Police officers are struggling to make ends meet and some are turning to food banks to feed their families, the Police Federation annual conference has heard.

National deputy secretary John Partington told delegates that the cost of living crisis and hikes in National Insurance contributions had left some members in dire straits in the wake of last year's zero per cent pay offer.

And he warned of worsening financial problems for many officers unless they were offered a fair pay deal this time round.

Speaking during a session on pay and pensions on the opening day of the Manchester conference, John said: "It's not just food banks, it's going for pay day loans, it's going to family and friends to get extra money.

"We have evidence of police officers waiting outside the supermarket just before midnight before their pay goes into their bank account so they can do a shop."

John said the pay rise given to officers earning less than £24,000 a year amounted to very little in real terms.

He told delegates: "If you look at the pay award last year - £250 for the lower paid officers - and then start taking the tax and National Insurance and pension off that you are actually talking about £12 or £13 a month.

"With all the increases in the cost of living and inflation, that is just eroded within a millisecond and it is not going to do anything for them.

"So I think there are big problems ahead. We have relied on food banks for some time now and it is only going to get worse."

National secretary Alex Duncan told the pay and conditions session that police officers were being forced to quit the service for financial reasons.

He said: "I heard that a member of the Government has suggested one of the solutions for people struggling with the cost of living crisis was to go and find a better paid job.

"It would appear that with seven out of ten police officers are already thinking about leaving, maybe that will be the outcome. But it doesn't sound great for the British public or the police service."

National chair Steve Hartshorn later told the conference he was frustrated to hear that some colleagues could barely afford to feed their families and said the situation must not be allowed to continue.

He said: "Over the last decade, we have seen a real term pay cut of around 20 per cent and other costs haven't stood still - gas, electric and fuel costs all continue to rise, and National Insurance contributions have increased.

"Our members are told they are brave; they are told they do a unique job. They were thanked for putting themselves and their families in danger as Covid gripped the country, and yet that acknowledgement amounted to nothing.

"It's frustrating to see and hear from colleagues who are struggling to feed their families and going to food banks."

“ I HEARD THAT A MEMBER OF THE GOVERNMENT HAS SUGGESTED ONE OF THE SOLUTIONS FOR PEOPLE STRUGGLING WITH THE COST OF LIVING CRISIS WAS TO GO AND FIND A BETTER PAID JOB.

IT WOULD APPEAR THAT WITH SEVEN OUT OF TEN POLICE OFFICERS ARE ALREADY THINKING ABOUT LEAVING, MAYBE THAT WILL BE THE OUTCOME. BUT IT DOESN'T SOUND GREAT FOR THE BRITISH PUBLIC OR THE POLICE SERVICE. ”

CALL FOR COMPASSION IN THE ILL-HEALTH RETIREMENT PROCESS

Break-out session on first day of conference calls for a more consistent approach across the country

“There is a person at the end of the policy” agreed the panel as they discussed navigating ill-health retirement at this year’s conference.

The session involved National Board member Gemma Fox, South Wales Police Federation secretary Leigh Godfrey, senior solicitor for Taylor Law Mark Lake, and ill-health adviser at the Metropolitan Police Paul Turpin, all highlighting the need for forces to be more compassionate during the ill-health process.

Gemma reminded the auditorium that these “are people, our colleagues” and that the current process “leads to them feeling more undervalued”.

“Currently the ill-health retirement process is adversarial, leaving officers feeling even more devalued and more unwell at the end of the process. As a Federation, we need to understand the value of ill-health retirement,” she said.

“Forces need to understand there are people at the end of the process, these are real people who are not going through this process by choice, they are going through it because they are unwell or injured.”

Gemma said the best thing that could impact the process is an added element of compassion and understanding that police officers need support.

She continued: “Forces need to step back and look at their own processes and really ask themselves, if they were going through that process, how would that make them feel?”

During the session, it was stressed that there is not simply one process that is followed by each branch but instead 43 different ways of approaching ill-health retirement, depending on the force.

Paul elaborated by saying: “We need a more consistent approach across the country.”

Echoing Paul’s comments, Leigh, who is South Wales Police Federation ill-health retirement liaison officer, said: “The process has become really adversarial and the inconsistency across forces is just phenomenal.

“ FORCES NEED TO UNDERSTAND THERE ARE PEOPLE AT THE END OF THE PROCESS, THESE ARE REAL PEOPLE WHO ARE NOT GOING THROUGH THIS PROCESS BY CHOICE, THEY ARE GOING THROUGH IT BECAUSE THEY ARE UNWELL OR INJURED. ”

National Board member Gemma Fox outlines the issues officers face.

“What I would ask forces and pension authorities to remember is that there’s a person at end of this policy and it’s an arduous policy and it really does damage the people going through it.”

A video, which opened the session, showed Leigh urging those attending to remember the importance of ill-health retirement. In the eye-opening clip, he said: “We need to help people retire with the dignity and respect they deserve.”

He went on to cite a case he is working on, where the officer was left with significant mental health issues.

“This officer was so unwell he couldn’t put on police uniform, it made him physically unwell. They allowed him to come into work in plain clothes, but he was surrounded by uniformed officers, so it had a detrimental impact on his mental health.

“He is still too unwell to speak about his experience. Unfortunately, he has had to go through this really distressing process to get that assessment.”

The panel members also shined a light on issues surrounding mental health and disability. They discussed how in some cases, the common misperception is that these officers “are underperforming”, with those “who love their job” often getting put into “back office” roles rather than their injuries or wellbeing being addressed head on at an early stage.

Mark continued: “The majority of our cases now involve mental health, and the current process isn’t going to help them.”

The panel also told delegates there should be a greater focus on rehabilitating and supporting officers as soon as possible.

Leigh said: “If we’re struggling now, how will we meet demands as the retirement age gets older? There’s a person at the end of the policy, so let’s start putting these people first.”

Gemma agreed: “We need to make sure forces value and put in the right support mechanisms for officers injured on duty. We don’t want people to become broken.

“Ultimately, if we don’t look after our people, they will need to take ill-health retirement.”

LACK OF CULTURAL UNDERSTANDING RISKS POLICE 'FAILING COMMUNITIES'

Police forces will fail their communities if they do not understand or interact with them, a session on cultural awareness heard.

Tiff Lynch, Police Federation National Board member and conduct and performance committee secretary, introduced a break-out session where a panel involving the chair of the Federation's race, religion and belief group, a chief officer, a representative of the Home Office and a regional director of the Independent Office for Police Conduct (IOPC) discussed how a lack of cultural awareness impacts on the disciplinary process.

Tiff referred to the Cain report of 2019 which had identified that black, Asian and minority ethnic (BAME) officers were disproportionately represented in misconduct cases.

She said: "These officers are referred to professional standards more often and more of them face management action as result."

Paul Odle, from the race, religion and belief group, spoke about being a black officer of 31 years in service and admitted: "We were discussing these issues 30 years ago and I'm sick to death of talking about this agenda. If we can't treat protected characteristics correctly within the service, we can't treat the public correctly. We need to get actions so that we are not having these similar conversations again in another 30 years."

"We can't keep playing the blame game and calling police officers racist," he reasoned. "But we need to get better at understanding our communities. If not, we create problems. I think we need to have that bit of extra training."

T/DCC Tyron Joyce of West Yorkshire

Paul Odle from the race, religion and belief group.

Tiff Lynch, Police Federation National Board member.

Police talked about a plan coming forward from the National Police Chiefs' Council and the College of Policing to address the negative experiences of black people and with the intention of creating an anti-racist police service.

DCC Joyce admitted that officers will be cynical of "yet another plan" but said the intention is to challenge the culture of policing.

He said: "If the only time a police officer sees the black community is when they are in crisis, or the only time they see us is in crisis, I understand how prejudice can occur on both sides."

Sal Naseem, regional director of the IOPC, added that officers from marginalised groups need to be welcomed into policing and their difference valued. If not, then all the work that has been done in recruitment to make the service better resemble the make-up of England and Wales would be for nothing, he said.

OFFICER WELFARE MUST BE PRIORITY DURING MUTUAL AID DEPLOYMENTS

Officer welfare should always be at the front and centre of mutual aid operations, the Police Federation conference has heard.

Delegates who attended a panel discussion at the Manchester event were told there was a need for deeper understanding of the issues faced by planning teams behind major operations such as the G7 talks in Cornwall and the COP26 event in Glasgow which between them saw the deployment of more than 15,000 officers.

The Police Federation has a key role to play supporting officers on mutual aid deployments offering a range of services from providing much-needed refreshments and helping with accommodation to representing members in disputes over over-time, rest days and leave.

Federation National Board member Steve Taylor said the police service had made improvements in the way it dealt with issues around accommodation, food and welfare at mutual aid operations but said there was lots of room for improvement.

He said: "With these planning operations, being involved from the early stages will allow lessons learned from previous deployments, around accommodation standards, food provision and the wellbeing of our officers, not to be repeated again.

"We need to understand that many, if not all of our members, are volunteers and the public won't see that. So, we need to make sure that our volunteers are taken care of whilst they take care of us."

Essex Police Chief Constable Ben-Julian Harrington acknowledged the need for a new framework covering mutual aid.

National Federation treasurer Simon Kempton told delegates mutual aid had become so prevalent it was important to get things right for members and also the public.

The panel recommended a review of existing rules and regulations and called for work to be done on areas not fit for purpose.

PANEL DEBATES WHETHER UPLIFT IS JUST A NUMBERS GAME

Is the Police Uplift Programme more than a numbers game? This was the question put to a panel of experts on the opening day of conference.

The session began with words from Dave Bamber, National Board member, who said it was “impossible to argue” that the Government’s promise of a 20,000-officer uplift was not welcome, adding “the service needs more staff”.

However, Dave went on to question whether policing was prepared for the influx.

“Having hollowed out the training departments and reduced tutoring to a minimum, were we ready take these officers in? Have they developed into an efficient and effective workforce, or have we just been playing a numbers game where we now have 20,000 more people but not necessarily 20,000 more police officers who are capable of doing the role?” he asked.

The question was picked up by the panel, which comprised of Mark Jones, secretary of North Wales Police Federation, Kurtis Christoforides from Police Now, Jo Noakes representing the College of Policing, Dr Sarah Charman a professor of criminology, and Sarah Davenport speaking for the National Police Chiefs’ Council.

Mark painted a picture of trainees who were stressed and struggling to cope with the pressures of a demanding full-time job, with full-time studying, plus poor pay and cancelled rest days. He said this reality contrasted with the Home Secretary visiting forces and being told “what she wanted to hear” - that everything was well.

And he compared the uplift programme to the misselling of PPI: “We’re not being honest with people about the trauma they are going to see. We’re not telling them that they are going to have to work night shifts and that they will have to work Christmas. In this drive to get people through the door, we’ve let slip the reality of what policing is.”

The session heard that the current 139,000 police officers in England and Wales includes 31,000 new recruits. This represents an uplift of 13,576 officers once those leaving or retiring are factored in.

Dr Charman, a professor at Portsmouth University, spoke about a four-year study she has carried out into police officer retention. The number of officers resigning had risen by 104 per cent at the end of 2020 compared to 2012, she said.

Reasons for this vary but include poor leadership, excessive workloads and a mismatch between expectations of the job and the reality. There were personal reasons for leaving relating to mental and physical health and stress, as well as a “sense of organisational injustice – officers feeling a lack of voice, autonomy, lack of progression and also bullying and harassment,” she added.

Kurtis, a director at Police Now, said the recruitment market is changing and the idea of a life-long career was increasingly a thing of the past.

“People want a ‘portfolio career’ these days,” he said, “That goes hand in glove with a more flexible entry and exit into the service.”

He added that people leaving the service might eventually come back bringing other experience to the job.

Radio host Ian Collins, who compered the session, commented that the media had been “absolutely appalling” in some of its coverage of the police, highlighting bad incidents and creating the perception that it represents all of policing.

In light of this, the panel agreed that it was commendable of new recruits to still want to join the service and to step up to serve their community.

“ HAVING HOLLOWED OUT THE TRAINING DEPARTMENTS AND REDUCED TUTORING TO A MINIMUM, WERE WE READY TAKE THESE OFFICERS IN? HAVE THEY DEVELOPED INTO AN EFFICIENT AND EFFECTIVE WORKFORCE, OR HAVE WE JUST BEEN PLAYING A NUMBERS GAME WHERE WE NOW HAVE 20,000 MORE PEOPLE BUT NOT NECESSARILY 20,000 MORE POLICE OFFICERS WHO ARE CAPABLE OF DOING THE ROLE? ”

CONFUSION AND MISINFORMATION OVER POLICE PENSIONS

Police pension arrangements have failed to put all officers on the same platform and have caused widespread confusion and misinformation about how they are calculated, the Police Federation annual conference has heard.

Day one of the 2022 conference closed with a panel discussion on what has become one of the most contentious issues for police officers across England and Wales.

Simon Horgan, field officer for Metfriendly, which offers financial services and products to police officers and their families, said individual officers should establish an exit point to help them with their payment calculation.

He told delegates: "Being aware of your exit point is very important as we are dealing with lots of myths around pension calculations.

"Find out your exit points. Some are affected more than others. That is why it is important to know what is a good exit point for you."

National Federation vice-chair Ché Donald

National Federation vice-chair Ché Donald.

said there was a disparity in pension benefits to police officers because of the changes to the pension scheme.

And national secretary Alex Duncan told the conference: "We have raised with the Government issues with the scheme advisory board. We think the Government can fix it in a number of ways."

Speaking at an earlier session on pay and conditions, national deputy secretary John Partington said the police pensions system was not working.

He told delegates: "I think it is important to point out that the Police Federation position on this is very clear: that officers should have stayed on the pensions they joined because people plan financially and plan for the future and when things change it is not great.

"The Government then lost the court cases, as Federation reps know very well, but what they have been slow to do is actually put the proper mechanisms and legislation in place to enact it.

"They did the first bit of legislation to ensure all serving officers know if they are paying into a pension scheme or paying into the 2015 care scheme but what they have not done is put the mechanisms in place to address the more detailed problems of moving people across pension schemes

"So essentially, the first legislation is a bit of paper, saying as of this day you stop accruing in the scheme and move to this scheme and we'll deal with the harder stuff some time later on.

"All officers should have stayed in the original schemes and I think the Government is in danger of spending a lot of money to fix a problem which it created itself."

SUBS INCREASE WAS TOUGH DECISION

Delegates' vote in favour of increasing Federation subscriptions in line with any police pay rise followed a tough decision-making process, according to Cambridgeshire Police Federation chair Liz Groom.

Liz was speaking after a motion on the subs issue was supported at the national conference yesterday with 221 delegates voting for a rise and 170 voting against.

She explained: "It was a really difficult and tough decision by conference, but subs have not been raised for many years while the costs of everything we do have - from paying branch utility bills to funding vital legal advice when our officers need it most.

"I would not want any service we provide to members to be at risk because the Federation makes a popular decision to not raise subscriptions now.

"Any increase will only come if we get a pay rise, of course, and will only be the same percentage rise as any salary boost. But I appreciate this is the worst possible time for us to be putting up our subscription rates."

Liz has also asked the national Federation to look at other internal efficiencies, calling for the continued use of virtual meetings to reduce the costs involved in staging in person meetings and training.

"We need to do everything we can to do things more smartly and ensure we are as efficient as possible," she said, "It is a time for a root and branch review of how we do business so that we can make sure we make savings where we can."

After the conference motion was supported a Police Federation of England and Wales (PFEW) statement was issued.

It said: "With the current cost of living crisis, last year's pay freeze and without knowing if our members will receive an increase in their pay this year or not, now is not the time to increase Police Federation of England and Wales subscriptions.

"PFEW, however, is also facing increased costs. Soaring inflation, upcoming litigation and the financial health of our National Reserves Fund means we need to at least start to have an open and honest conversation on this subject with Federation representatives to make sure that there is a strong, viable Federation fighting for our members for years to come."

The Federation said the conference gave the perfect opportunity to open the conversation surrounding subscription rates, which have only increased once in the last decade.

The statement continued: "On such an important issue, PFEW took the view conference delegates should be given the opportunity to hear the rationale for any proposed future increase in subscriptions immediately.

"We care passionately about the views of our members which is why hearing from delegates at conference - their representatives - on this matter was vital. On that basis, it was agreed to bring a motion to conference this year for discussion."

The conference motion looked at future options for an increase in subscriptions on the basis that it would only be introduced once it has been confirmed by the Government that members will receive a pay increase.

As a result of the motion, the conference supported increasing the rate of all types of Federation subscriptions effective from 1 September 2022, in line with the percentage uplift to police pay for 2022/2023.

CONDUCT SYSTEM 'COULD COLLAPSE' OVER INDEMNITY ROW

Panel discusses modernising hearings and asks if change is needed

The misconduct process “could collapse” due to a legal ruling which means that panellists could be sued for their decisions, the Police Federation conference heard on the Wednesday morning of the two-day event.

In a session entitled “Modernising Hearings” John Bassett of the National Association of Legally Qualified Chairs (NALQC) set out the view of his organisation that the Eckland case established that LQCs (and any other panellist) can be held liable and, so far, the Home Office has refused to indemnify them or provide immunity.

As a result, the NALQC has advised its members not to accept new appointments, which is contributing to a backlog in misconduct cases being resolved.

John said: “The advice we’ve given to our members is not something we took lightly. We have put forward a perfectly straightforward one-clause bill to the Home Office and they are prevaricating. Meanwhile, claims continue to be made.

“If the situation is not sorted out the present system is going to collapse because LQCs will not be prepared to put their livelihoods, their homes and their families at risk of financial ruin. If that is the situation then almost by default the position will return to what the National Police Chiefs’ Council appears to be seeking which is a return to misconduct hearings being presided over by chief officers.”

Chief Constable Craig Guildford of Nottinghamshire Police, who joined the session via video link, said efforts to improve the timeliness of misconduct hearings – which is best for complainants, officers and families – was not helped by Covid or the NALQC stance, which he took issue with.

Mr Guildford insisted: “For avoidance of doubt, the officers on those panels are covered by chief constables. The delays caused by some LQCs not sitting are not helping officers or public confidence. I don’t know of cases other than Eckland where these [legal issues] are being raised. I think we need to get moving.”

But Mr Bassett doubled-down and cast doubt over whether police forces would be legally able to indemnify their representatives on a panel. He said this was because of doubts about whether Section 88 of the Police Act applied to officers serving on a panel – and if not the reassurances from chiefs would count for nothing.

The Independent Office for Police Conduct (IOPC), which traditionally comes in for criticism at Police Federation gatherings, unusually had a good session. Its director of strategy and impact, Kathie Cashell, talked about the efforts the organisation has made to speed up the timeliness of its investigations.

She said: “We’re really proud of the improvements we’ve made. Our concerns now are less about the investigation timeliness and more about the proceedings that happen after the investigations. The IOPC improvements have not been replicated in those areas.”

Ms Cashell added that IOPC caseloads were being negatively impacted by delays from misconduct hearings in forces, and decisions from the Crown Prosecution Service or inquests that typically add another 12 months. There is a need to shine a spotlight on that, she said.

Phill Matthews from the Police Federation National Board and the national conduct and performance lead has spearheaded campaigns to highlight the mental health effects and unfairness on officers, and families, due to long delays in completing investigations. He welcomed the involvement of LQCs as a way of “improving public confidence, trust and transparency”, and reiterated that the Federation supports their concerns around indemnity.

Phill raised concerns about a return to chief officer led misconduct panels – particularly fast-tracked cases – which run the risk of prioritising dismissals rather than fairness to the officer involved. Phill noted that the Police Foundation had sought a review of LQC role claiming that it had “become harder to dismiss officers”.

He added: “The Federation’s main thrust is timeliness. The IOPC has improved dramatically but there are still over 300 of their cases that exceed 12 months and are paused waiting for other processes to happen. That’s why we need letters to come into PCCs [which 2020 regulations now allow] so we can put the spotlight on where those delays are happening. Professional Standards Departments in a fifth of all cases that go beyond 12 months haven’t written the letter as they are meant to and there is absolutely no comeback.”

OUR REP SAYS...

From my perspective it was really good to attend an ‘in person’ conference. We took six workplace reps with Liz Groom (branch chair) and I. It was really good to share some quality time with them and to get a feel for their experiences as reps and to give advice and share some experiences. The conference itself I thought was a success, with strong panels, a very good location with some really interesting exhibition stands.

'MISOGYNY MUST BE CHALLENGED'

The panel (left to right): Manjit Atwal QPM from the College of Policing, Zoe Wakefield and Sam Hawkins from the Women's Group and DCC Maggie Blyth.

The Police Federation is taking steps towards introducing strategies to help tackle misogyny within the service, the 2022 annual conference has heard.

Sam Hawkins, secretary of the Federation's National Women's Group, acknowledged new measures were needed to bring an end to inappropriate and sexist behaviour within policing and said important work on developing new policies was already being undertaken.

She told delegates: "We are waiting for some more up-to-date information from the HMIC but Durham University did a survey for the National Police Chiefs' Council (NPCC) in 2019 on diversity and equality and that found 27.8 per cent of female officers reported experiencing derogatory remarks about their gender and 34.5 per cent reported experiencing sexist comments from someone in the force."

She continued: "This is something we are quite passionate about as a women's group and we want any of our colleagues and anyone involved in the National Women's Group to be involved in that so we can get some policies, some toolkits, whatever we need out there."

"We also need to make sure there is a reporting process as well so that people who do want to report or talk to someone about their experiences have more than the professional standards department (PSD) or the confidential reporting line and can talk about those small things. If a female officer is made to feel uncomfortable they should be able to talk to somebody about it."

"Despite the horrific, awful things that have been in the media, we understand that not all of our colleagues are predators and behave in that way but we do need men and women to speak out and just challenge that behaviour.

"It takes an awfully long time to change a culture but if we all play a part in it and all do our bit we can try and affect that change much quicker and make the world a better place and policing a better place for our daughters, granddaughters and any women coming into the organisation in future years."

Opening a panel discussion on day two of the Manchester conference, National Women's Group chair Sue Honeywill told delegates: "With half of the population being female, it is increasingly important that we understand how the issue impacts, not only within policing but in society as a whole."

"And while the word is now in regular use, it is frequently misunderstood with some high-profile politicians having mistakenly said such behaviour involves behaviour towards males. For the avoidance of doubt, it doesn't."

"In simple terms, misogyny is a behaviour towards women which shows either a dislike, hatred or contempt towards women."

Sue told delegates she accepted discussing misogyny within policing was emotive and often divisive as it challenged both men and women to reflect on past and present behaviours and consider their own unconscious biases.

But she added: "We seek to raise the profile of the issues and consider how we can improve understanding and involve culture norms to build an environment where both sexes feel equal and individuals feel empowered and safe to speak up and challenge."

INSPIRING MUM WINS WOMEN IN POLICING AWARD

An inspirational mother-of-four who juggles working as a police officer with raising her family was presented with the prestigious Outstanding Contribution to Women in Policing Award at this year's Police Federation of England and Wales annual conference.

Jennifer Sharpling, a sergeant in the Metropolitan Police, clinched the title after devoting much of her time to maternity-related issues in the workplace, using her own experiences to become a pioneer in perinatal mental health.

After having her first child in 2016 and suffering from significant mental health issues, Jennifer found there was not any specific support for police officers and staff with these conditions.

Prompted to take action and make change, Jennifer now leads a national team of officers from across the country, who are working together to write a national policy that will better support staff.

She also works closely with professors on research projects, so the police service can really understand the impact perinatal mental health issues have on police officers and staff.

Jennifer is also the co-founder of #BleepKind, a peer support group designed to offer a safe space for police officers and staff to share their concerns surrounding the bleep test, which comes annually for officers as part of a fitness assessment.

The Police Federation of England and Wales presents the Outstanding Contribution to Women in Policing Award to recognise a serving or recently retired officer who has gone above and beyond their job, while on duty.

PANEL URGES MEMBERS TO STOP THE STIGMA SURROUNDING SUICIDE

Former officer shares his experience of PTSD during conference break-out session

'We need to fight the taboo and that stigma around suicide needs to go if we want to save lives' is the clear message that came from the Fighting for your Lives session at this year's annual conference.

The hard-hitting, emotional and powerful session shined a light on the reality of officers taking their own lives, with Federation representatives urged to talk more openly about suicide, to make it more visible.

On the panel was former officer Ed Simpson who shared his own experience of post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), which resulted in him spiralling and ultimately considering taking his own life.

"I remember driving to work and thinking I wanted to kill myself. That should've been an irrational thought, but it was completely rational," said Ed, who worked for both South and North Yorkshire Police.

"I actually hated myself because I was still alive."

One week later, completely burnt out – both physically and mentally – Ed was diagnosed with shingles, which led to him visiting the doctor and being officially told he had PTSD, sparked by witnessing trauma after trauma during his career.

Ed spoke of one particular incident whereby he took a family to see their son in the morgue. He described how he will never get over the sound of the mother screaming when she saw her son. Little did he know, but this was the trigger event that would lead to his complex PTSD diagnosis years later.

Having been signed off work for a year, Ed received the devastating news that his salary would be docked to half-pay, leading to him feeling "totally worthless".

"That same day, I fell out of love with policing," said Ed, who returned back to work after 12 months, before medically retiring three years later.

"The journey to get there ruined me. I will never be the same again."

Ed was joined by Oscar Kilo CEO Andy Rhodes QPM, Greater Manchester suicide prevention programme manager at the NHS Adele Owen QPM, and facilitator of families against corporate killers at Greater Manchester Hazards Centre Hilda Palmer.

Hilda, who has conducted research on work-related suicide, explained her findings revealed 10 per cent of all suicides have a work-related component.

Adele, a former officer with Greater Manchester Police, said supervisors and managers need to be given suicide-prevention training.

"The word suicide isn't being used enough, we always fall back on the phrases mental health and wellbeing. We need to break the stigma and we need to start being direct with people," she said.

"The first thing we need to do, we need to talk about it, we haven't been talking about it. We need to fight the taboo and that stigma needs to go if we want to save lives."

Andy explained how Oscar Kilo is spending time working with national charity The Samaritans researching specific factors that are driving mental health issues, as well as how force can better support loved ones who are bereaved following a suicide.

"What I want to point out is that eight or nine years ago, people wouldn't have had the courage to stand up and talk about mental health. What we are seeing, people are more willing to speak out, especially young recruits," he continued.

"We're a long way off but we will get to a point where psychological risk and harm are treated the same as physical risk.

"Ultimately though, it's the employer's responsibility – the force's responsibility - to support these people."

Ed agreed, saying: "We need to give people the courage to ask others if they're OK, because that person might be driving to work that morning, wishing they were dead.

"Welfare starts at home, with colleagues and friends."

“ THE FIRST THING WE NEED TO DO, WE NEED TO TALK ABOUT IT, WE HAVEN'T BEEN TALKING ABOUT IT. WE NEED TO FIGHT THE TABOO AND THAT STIGMA AROUND SUICIDE NEEDS TO GO IF WE WANT TO SAVE LIVES. ”

POLICE DRIVERS MUST ENSURE THEIR TRAINING IS UP TO DATE

All police drivers must be 'in ticket' with their training if they are to benefit from the new protections they will receive under the Police, Crime, Sentencing and Courts Act, conference was told.

Tim Rogers, secretary of West Midlands Police Federation and the national Federation lead on pursuits driving and driver training, has led a long campaign to bring about the change in law introduced through the new legislation.

Under the act, police officers' driving will no longer be assessed by the standards of the careful and competent member of the public but by those of their skilled and training colleagues.

He said: "We've had this catalogue of shame where officers were on the wrong side of the law, embroiled in lengthy criminal and misconduct investigations which have caused untold stress.

"We are in a better position because we campaigned for eight years. It's a major achievement."

Tim stressed that it was critically important for officers to demonstrate they were up to date with their training to ensure they benefited from the new protection and was supported by DCC Terry Woods, the National Police Chiefs' Council driving lead, and driver training expert Roger Gardner.

DCC Woods explained: "If they can't, and if some people in your forces have slipped out of date, or forces are behind, I would argue this needs to be put on the top of the list, because it's an area of high frequency and high risk. It is really important."

Mr Gardner added: "When this legislation comes through, if your members aren't in date - effectively you are driving against the law. You really need to get on to them and tell them they have got to be trained, and they have got to be in date - if they are not, they'll be committing a criminal offence."

Individuals needed to take responsibility to ensure they are 'in ticket' but the responsibility did not end with them, managers, chief officers and forces also had to share this, delegates were told.

Tim also highlighted the way in which officers' driving would be assessed.

"Without appropriate governance, we would have found our campaign for officer driving to be assessed against that of their similarly trained colleagues and it could have led to officers being at more risk of prosecution than less.

"A breach of driving policy could be considered a breach of law, which is why we needed those assessing the drivers through this new legal process to have the professionalism, knowledge and expertise required, so officers have the confidence to use their skills and training in the way intended without fear of prosecution."

A panel of subject matter experts will now consider cases where police officers' driving comes into question with DCC Woods and Tim being part of the process.

They will ensure that only complete evidence is provided, putting an end to previous failings whereby only selective information and evidence has been put forward. The panel's reports will be available to both prosecution and defence.

This process will be part of the new legislation when it comes into effect.

West Midlands Police Federation has already hosted training days at its offices for a range of stakeholders including the Home Office, Crown Prosecution Service, the Independent Office for Police Conduct, National Police Chiefs' Council (NPCC), and specialist lawyers.

The break-out session also stressed the importance of standardised training in police driving units across England and Wales.

Driving schools, which could become licensed in the same way as firearms units, are now expected to fill out self-assessment forms covering all aspects of their work and spot-checks will be carried out. The College of Policing will also issue new Authorised Professional Practice (APP).

Delegates were urged to ask questions of their driving schools and find out if they had completed their self-assessment forms.

During the session, Simon Hill from the Metropolitan Police Federation introduced footage of a police pursuit of a scooter which led to an officer being charged with causing death by dangerous driving, illustrating the jeopardy officers found themselves in under the previous legislation when they were doing the job the public expected of them.

The officer was cleared by a jury but only after what was described as six years of hell for him and his family.

The session ended with questions from delegates and Tim thanking all those who had helped secure the new legislation including Sir Henry Bellingham, the former Norfolk MP who was among the first politicians to get behind the Federation campaign.

OUR REP SAYS...

This is not just of huge importance to Roads Policing but to all officers. This is a huge advancement in protection for police drivers. This will not allow officers to drive like maniacs, but if they drive to standards taught by the driving school and are 'in date' then this legislation will provide a defence for officers accused of dangerous or careless driving. The assessment of the driving of the officer involved will be completed by a cadre of subject matter experts, so if you find yourself in the unfortunate position of being accused of dangerous or careless driving then contact your Fed office at the earliest opportunity. DISCLOSURE GUIDANCE HAS CREATED A 'CRISIS IN POLICING'

The Police Federation conference was told of a growing crisis in policing that is pushing officers to breaking point and delaying justice for victims.

Ben Hudson, secretary of the Federation's National Detectives' Forum, led the final session at the Manchester gathering to highlight the impact of DG6 – the guidance on charging that came into effect in January last year.

It has added obligations to the officer in charge of an investigation and front-loaded the disclosure process amounting to a "hidden tax on policing", Ben said.

He played clips of investigating officers who spelled out the real impacts of the changes, both to their workloads and the ability to deliver a timely service to victims.

Isabelle Jenkins, speaking to camera, said rape allegations previously took an average of six to nine months from the start of an investigation to the point of charge. Since the advent of DG6 that has now doubled.

She added: "My most recent rape investigation has taken me 12 months to secure a charge. I have two colleagues who are at the 18 months point. This isn't our investigations that are taking this long, it is the consistent changes and action plans from the CPS. I've had victims whose mental health has taken a decline because they just want answers. It's bad enough what they've been through as a rape victim, let alone waiting a year to find out if they are going to get any justice."

PC Georgie Dodd said her workload had increased because of disclosure, and morale was very low. Louise Goddard from Wiltshire Police spoke on camera about how a colleague of 22 years quit due to "having had enough" of the workload, and Louise also wonders how long she can continue.

PC Josh Ives added: "I feel like our hands are completely tied behind our back by the changes."

Ben drew attention to the findings of the Federation's 2021 pay and morale survey which found that 96 per cent of detectives who responded felt the changes had increased the number of hours spent on pre-charge file preparation. In addition, 87 per cent said the changes had increased their stress, and 86 per cent felt the changes had decreased the efficiency of the criminal justice system.

Ben, who is also secretary of Suffolk Police Federation, added: "Perhaps the most alarming statistic was that 45 per cent – almost half, indicated the number of victims who had withdrawn from active participation with their investigation had increased due to the changes."

Under the previous system, if officers

submitted 100 cases to the CPS, around 75 would result in a charge and require the completion of a full file. Since DG6, all 100 now require a file, even though 25 will not result in a charge.

Ben pointed out that this represented a 33 per cent increase in workload and effort to no avail. New redaction requirements involve, on average, an additional four hours per case he added.

“ I FEEL LIKE OUR HANDS ARE TIED BEHIND OUR BACK BY THE CHANGES. ”

The Federation's concerns were put directly to Max Hill QC, Director of Public Prosecutions, who insisted "I do get it," before adding: "DG6 came into force on 31 December 2020 not because I chose that date but when the Attorney General decided after a long conversation that there had to be a step change."

Mr Hill admitted that the CPS had too often got it wrong when it came to disclosure and cases were coming unstuck in court. He also conceded that the system is "front loaded" currently. However, he argued that police and the CPS were working much more effectively now as "one team" even if staff on both sides were more tired or carrying more cases than before.

He added: "I can assure you we are not attempting to apply any higher standard than what the law requires. We are simply saying 'these are the challenges we are going to face as one team when this goes to court' so as one team let's see if we can meet those challenges. If we get it right first time, we won't find our cases are torpedoed when it comes to court."

Also on the panel was Nick Ephgrave, assistant commissioner of the Metropolitan Police. His take on DG6 was there was now "increased rigour" around the application of disclosure law, along with an exponential increase in the volume of data.

He said: "I say to my people you've got to start thinking of disclosure from the minute you read the crime report. If you do that some of this workload will get spread across the time period – it's not the solution, but it's the other side of the coin of investigation."

The panel agreed that an impending review of the impact of the guidelines by the Attorney General's Office offered the possibility of positive changes to reduce the burden on officers and speed up justice.

During the session, Ben also highlighted the pressures officers were facing due to redaction requirements under the Data Protection Act.

He said: "We would urge the Government to address this immediately. An amendment to the act to allow the CPS and the police service to be treated as one entity would make a huge difference and save considerable time."

"An expert review of nine files found that the new redaction requirements involve, on average, an additional four hours per case. And this will be considerably higher for more complex investigations."

OUR REP SAYS...

I think disclosure has been a big issue and hopefully with the director general on board that will help moving forward and well done to Ben Hudson and the detective team for their work in this area.

A TSUNAMI OF DISCRIMINATION CLAIMS

Break-out session considers the impact of the Covid pandemic on claims

Barriers faced by disabled police disappeared overnight at the start of the Covid-19 pandemic but are returning and creating a “tsunami of new claims”, the Police Federation annual conference has heard.

National Board member Ian Saunders said the number of Unsatisfactory Performance Procedures (UPP) claims fell away dramatically during the pandemic but were now rising heavily and heading towards pre-Covid levels.

“We are seeing a return of what we used to see before in relation to UPP claims,” he told delegates at a break-out session on disability discrimination.

“But the basic point is UPP is not, and has never been, a primary mechanism for supporting police officers.

“It is a performance-related mechanism which is very much unsuited to managing an officer with a disability.

“During the pandemic we saw the number of claims that came in and the number of cases that came in went right down.

“About 50 per cent of the employment budget that goes out of Leatherhead - about £3 million a year - is on disability-related claims and much of that went away during the Covid pandemic.

“Hence the tsunami of claims. It’s more than a blip that’s coming now after a period of quiet, there’s a lot coming through the door.”

Ian said cases of disability discrimination did not come in isolation but were at the centre of a mechanical functioning adopted by line managers.

He told the workshop: “Line managers unlawfully discriminate against colleagues with disability absence on their record by using UPP.

“Even though unlawful, line managers are serving written improvement notices and asking colleagues to report to work against or without medical advice. UPP is not designed to manage disability related absences.”

The Police Federation’s in-house solicitor Eleanor Porter said line managers should always refer to the Equality Act while dealing with disabled officers.

She said: “The discretion to initiate UPP must be appreciated as most regulations that follow are mandatory. However, there is nothing to stop the line manager from using their discretionary powers.

“What is really required, for an informed decision to be taken in a case of long-term absence through disability, is a process that requires medical evidence as to whether there is any prospect of the officer returning to work, in what capacity and consultation with the officer about the options, including alternative work, medical discharge and termination.”

“ ABOUT 50 PER CENT OF THE EMPLOYMENT BUDGET THAT GOES OUT OF LEATHERHEAD - ABOUT £3 MILLION A YEAR - IS ON DISABILITY-RELATED CLAIMS AND MUCH OF THAT WENT AWAY DURING THE COVID PANDEMIC. ”

'WE ARE FORMIDABLE WHEN WE WORK TOGETHER'

National secretary praises Federation colleagues as he prepares for retirement

Police Federation stalwart Alex Duncan has attended his last annual conference as national secretary ahead of his imminent retirement.

Alex, who became a Fed rep in 1999 and has been national secretary since 2018, said serving the organisation had been a "real honour" and praised the work of colleagues across the 43 forces in England and Wales.

He told delegates at the 2022 annual conference: "I am lucky. I know a lot of people who spend most of their working lives counting the moments until they retire and I have never been like that.

"Somebody asked me how many days I had left and genuinely don't know which is probably a good sign because there's not many of them left.

"Policing has been great for me and I have done a wide variety of different things and the Federation to me is the best of policing because it is people from within the service looking after their colleagues."

Alex acknowledged there had been some tough times as well as great successes over the years and urged the Federation to show strength through unity in the coming years.

He said: "I have been here for good times and bad. We have had some fairly spectacular moments along the way and some that are best forgotten.

"We are most effective when we work together and I guess where we are sometimes not so great at talking to each other and trusting each other.

Alex joined Avon and Somerset Police in 1990 and before becoming a Federation rep has roles in response, community policing and the District Crime Unit.

He said his decision to become a Federation rep was based on a commitment to promoting and safeguarding the rights and working conditions of rank and file officers.

He held various posts including deputy branch secretary and conduct lead and was Avon and Somerset branch board secretary from 2007 to 2014.

Alex then became a National Board member and held the position of chair of the conduct and performance sub-committee for more than two years.

Before becoming national secretary in 2018, he was chair of the legislation sub-committee and head of civil claims, responsible for the hundreds of claims submitted by members every year, including employment tribunals and discrimination cases.

Deputy national secretary John Partington paid tribute to Alex and said his negotiating skills and attention to detail set him apart from others.

John said: "One area where he is formidable and passionate is in negotiating for members.

"People often see him as the grumpy man walking around the room but when he is in those negotiations - whether that's pensions, regulations or pay - he is always across all the details, more so than a lot of other people in the room.

"He is passionate and the reason for that is he wants to get the best for police officers."

'SACRIFICE WILL BE RECOGNISED'

Home Secretary Priti Patel says she's determined to recognise the sacrifice of police officers killed in service.

In her conference speech, she described lives lost in the line of duty as "an enormous tragedy".

But she stopped short of fully backing a new campaign for a new posthumous award for emergency services workers who die in the line of duty.

Ms Patel said: "In relation to death in service, there is no doubt that every life lost on duty and in the line of duty is an enormous tragedy.

"And I'm absolutely determined that in future this sacrifice will be recognised."

Police Federation chair Steve Hartshorn used his conference speech as a platform to call for the posthumous award, the Elizabeth Medal.

The Federation is backing a campaign for recognition for emergency personnel who make the ultimate sacrifice in the execution of their duties, including police officers.

It's envisaged the award will be similar to the Elizabeth Cross, which is awarded to the bereaved relatives of members of the British Armed Forces killed in action.

The campaign has been supported by Bryn Hughes, the father of Nicola Hughes who was murdered with her colleague PC Fiona Bone in 2012 during a gun and grenade attack in Greater Manchester.

Steve told the conference in Manchester: "Every year, at National Police Memorial Day and at the COPS weekend, we remember all our colleagues who have been killed or died on duty.

"There is no award that posthumously recognises fallen emergency service workers or the sacrifices they have made.

"No formal state recognition when someone dies doing their job keeping our communities safe and protecting the public. This is why we cannot leave any of our fallen colleagues behind.

"This medal won't repay the debt that we owe as a society to those who have been killed in the line of duty, but it will allow the public to express their thanks, and condolences to those officers and their families every time the medal is seen.

"Home Secretary, I call upon you today with an impassioned plea to stand with us and work towards this honour for all emergency service workers."
